

BREAKING NEWS

THAT YOU PROBABLY ALREADY KNOW

As you may have heard through the grapevine there has been a challenge for the Gadaffi Plate! The National SSAGO Assistants have formally challenged the national exec for the plate. Although details of what the challenge will involve have not been released yet (we're as clueless as you are) but we do know that the usual attire of swimming costumes and paper bags has been replaced with the rather boring alternative of national SSAGO clothing. The challenge will take place on Sunday, at a time and place that we also do not know, and we are told it will be amusing. Other than this very limited information we are somewhat in the dark about what's going on. Any forfeiture following this challenge must be made within 24 hours, so we may or may not still be on site when that happens. We shall see! Keep an eye out for any hustle and bustle around the site which may be this challenge, we shall try and find out when it's happening and let you know.

Just gonna clarify that none of the cringey newsletter stuff was me...

We however, are not sorry.

The Adventures of Some Walkers up Some Hills

Some of our brave (or stupid) members embarked upon the three peaks challenge today. Leaving site at 5.30am (before some had even gone to bed!) they complete the impressive challenge in 12 hours, which is a pretty damn impressive achievement. Despite being the ones completing the most difficult of the activities today, they still managed to keep us updated with their progress and send us some photos. Which I think means the rest of you are a little useless. We've been asked to include a massive thank you to Chris Mann for jumping in to lead the team at the last minute - cheers Chris!

ANTHROPOLOGY (Snaps, Stories and Gossip)

Despite our super simple manual on mascots in yesterday's edition, Harold the Hedgehog was nearly lost on the pub crawl by Anona Mann... Oh Mann!

...and Maurice the Dodo, another Exec mascot has been mistreated by International Officer Beatrice - stolen by a member of their own club!

Travelling somewhere was all too much for one LUSSAGO member... don't worry, we wouldn't embarrass you!

One member reports that "[They are] disappointed in the lack of obvious recycling"... this member was too distraught to provide a name.

"He was sleeping on the floor and we couldn't not"

Sorry James, I work for Josh now.

No Anona, we are not always happy!

THE ADVENTURES OF YELLOW MAN... AND FRIENDS

We met this unlikely superhero over the SSAGO snapchat page, as him (and his friends) eagerly awaited for Saturday BBQ. We followed his adventures before, during, and after dinner.

"Well, I've eaten all of it"
